Ryder Locknane

Junior, University of Washington

My name is Ryder Locknane, and I am working towards my degree in Construction Management at the University of Washington. I am the Major Project/Philanthropy chair of my Fraternity, member of an ASC team, and member of Peaks and Professors (UW Hiking Club).

I have grown up surrounded by many family friends in the construction industry. I have always enjoyed hands-on work and had an interest in how things work. Through my pressure washing business that I have run the past eight years, I have developed an appreciation for the value of a dollar, learned how to build relationships with clients, and further improve my management skills. I have been able to take what I have learned from running my small business and apply it to my past two summer internships.

Last summer I interned with Gencap Construction, an eastside contractor who focuses primarily on mixed used construction. I primarily worked alongside subcontractors in learning a variety of tasks as well as shadowing the labor foreman for the summer. This summer I have worked for Mortenson Construction where I have been located down at the Swedish Hospital First Hill Project. I have primarily worked under the Assistant Project Manager to help her with further coordination of our enabling projects before we are set to demolish three existing hospital towers.

My long-term goals will hopefully include employment at Mortenson with aspirations of working up the project management ladder to eventual upper management roles. In my spare time I enjoy hiking, cycling, skiing, surfing, and spending time with friends and family.
